The Detroit bridge projectors scored a victory over the marine interests Friday, when the Secretary of War appointed a commission of army officers to visit Detroit and report upon the practicability and advisability of bridging that stream. The commission is composed of Col. P. M. Poe, Major C. J. Allen and Major H. M. Adams. They will hold sessions at Detroit and gather public sentiment upon the subject. Senator Sherman said that Congress would never consent to the construction of a bridge at that point on account of the serious injury that would result to marine interests.

We believe that one of the most important questions for the present legislature to act upon is that of framing adequate laws for the building and maintenance of good roads. Every one who knows anything about the present system of paying road tax, knows that not more than 25 per cent of it is actually laid out on the road. The only right plan is to have the road taxes paid in money, then let the contractor to the lowest bidder, who shall work under the instructions of a skilled overseer, employed by the township or county. Main routes should be selected and those roads constructed and maintained by county authority. Care Advertiser.

Take Notice.
